Beekeepers Meeting in Rock Hill

The South Carolina Beekeepers Association will host a joint spring meeting with the North Carolina State Beekeepers Association on March 6-7, 2009 at the Baxter Hood Conference Center, York Technical College, Rock Hill, SC.

Out-of-state speakers for the meeting include: Kim Flottum, editor of Bee Culture magazine; David Tarpy and Debbie Delaney, NC State University; Bart Smith USDA/ARS Beltsville Maryland Bee Lab; Stanley Schneider, UNC-Charlotte; Jerry Hayes, Florida Department of Agriculture; and Jennifer Berry, University of Georgia. The meeting registration fee will be $14 (individual), $20 (family), $20 (individual/non-member) and $30 (family/non-members). The meeting will begin at 2 p.m.

SC Schools Awarded "Eat Smart, It's in the Garden" Grants

Five schools in South Carolina have been selected to receive $1,000 to implement or improve a garden site on their school grounds in the "Eat Smart, It's in the Garden" grant initiative. The recipients include: Mellichamp Elementary in Orangeburg County, Pauline-Glenn Springs Elementary in Spartanburg County, Pontiac Elementary in Richland County, Central Child Education Center, York County, and the New Direction School in Richland County.

The program initiated by Eat Smart, Move More...SC and the South Carolina Department of Agriculture supports the effort to offer a unique space within the school environment in which children of all abilities can achieve learning goals. Eat Smart, Move More...SC is a non-profit organization dedicated to the promotion of healthy eating and active living throughout South Carolina.

Hugh Weathers, Commissioner of Agriculture, said, "This program provides teachers with a tool to incorporate hands-on learning experiences with their students. The gardening experience also helps to instill good eating habits at an early age, provides children with a physical activity, and develops a greater appreciation for the great diversity of food that can be grown in South Carolina."

The grant period ends in June, and each of the grant recipients will be sharing their success stories and ideas for sustaining their gardening projects into the future.

2007 CENSUS OF AGRICULTURE Results Released

A record number of farmers invested in their future by participating in the 2007 Census of Agriculture. They will soon see a return on that investment. Census results were released February 4th by the U.S. Department of Agriculture's National Agricultural Statistics Service (NASS).

"The true value of the Census of Agriculture is in the information it provides," said Rhonda Brandt, Director of the NASS South Carolina Field Office. "The Census charts trends in agriculture over time and provides the only source of uniform, comprehensive data for every county in the nation."

The Census, which is conducted every five years, provides facts and figures on virtually every aspect of U.S. agriculture, including number and types of farm operations, the economic aspects of farm production and the demographics of U.S. farm operators.

For farmers and ranchers, Census data can be a valuable tool to help them make informed decisions about the future of their operations. In addition, the information is used by all those who serve farmers and rural communities, including government agencies, community planners, agribusinesses, lenders, trade associations and many others.

MarketMaker- a new tool in our toolbox

To do any job is much easier if you have the right tools. Or in my case, if you can find the tools that you know are somewhere in the toolbox. One of our primary 'jobs' at the Department is to bring farmers and consumers closer together. We're getting a new tool to do that and I want to use this column to tell you about it.

Starting next month, people interested in eating locally grown here in South Carolina - that should include you-- will have another means at their disposal to find the freshest food available. It's our new tool that is a web site called SC MarketMaker.

Dr. Dave Lamie at Clemson's Sandhills Research Center in Columbia, along with a lot of people including some dedicated folks at the South Carolina Department of Agriculture, has worked tirelessly to put together a new online program that will put the consumer directly in touch with our producers. And I have to tell you I am pretty excited about the capabilities of this online program.

The site was created in 2004 by a team from University of Illinois Extension with the intention of building the electronic wherewithal that would more easily connect food producing farmers with new markets. I understand it all started because livestock producers were looking to supply restaurants in Chicago with quality meats.

22nd Annual Wild Quail Management

Bobwhite quail populations in South Carolina and the Southeast have been declining steadily over the past 60 years due to major land use change and reduction in suitable habitat. The 22nd Annual Wild Quail Management Seminars, sponsored by the SC Department of Natural Resources and the SC State Committee of Quail Unlimited, are designed to instruct landowners and land managers in the proper techniques of creating habitat that will support native populations of bobwhite quail.

Two seminars will be conducted over a three-day period, March 5-7, at the Webb Wildlife Center (1282 Webb Avenue, Garnett) in Hampton County. The registration fee (at this time) is $75 and includes meals, overnight accommodations and seminar materials. Space is limited, so early registration is suggested to reserve a space in one of the two sessions.

Field demonstrations and classroom instruction will focus on habitat practices including firebreak establishment, prescribed burning, timber management, brush control, discing for natural foods and supplemental food patch plantings. Present-ations will be given on wild quail natural history, biology, diseases and parasites, predation and other factors that may be contributing to the population decline. An update on current research will also be presented. Speakers will include wildlife and forestry professionals from state and federal agencies.

For more information write Quail Management Seminars, DNR, PO Box 167, Columbia, SC 29202, or call the DNR Small Game Project in Columbia at 803-734-4306, barnesj@dnr.sc.gov.

on Friday, March 6, with a general session followed by a panel discussion. An evening dinner ($15 advance ticket required) will be held on Friday and will be followed by a keynote speaker. A wire grass band will perform during the evening dinner. Another general session will begin at 8:30 a.m. on Saturday morning and several workshops will be offered in the afternoon. The meeting is scheduled to end at 5 p.m.

All beekeepers or those interested in beekeeping are invited to attend for a good time of education and fellowship. For more information, contact Mike Hood, 864-656-0346, mhood@clemson.edu.

“The information provided from the Census is really the voice of our nation’s farmers and ranchers,” said Brandt. “They took the time to tell us about what’s happening in agriculture on a local and national level. That voice will be heard by policymakers and other agricultural stakeholders now and in the years ahead.”

Census results are available online and in various publications to be issued by NASS. For more information, visit www.agcensus.usda.gov or call 800-727-9540 or contact Rhonda Brandt, USDA Ag Statistics – SC Field Office – 803-765-5333.

Today, it's one of the most extensive collections of searchable food industry related data in the country and contains over 350,000 profiles of farmers and other food related enterprises in the states already signed on. Now that South Carolina has signed on, our farmers will have the same national reach as their counterparts in Iowa, Nebraska or Ohio. But it's just as important to be able to reach across the county as it is across the country.

SC MarketMaker is an interactive web portal, designed to foster promotion and sale of SC agricultural and seafood products through connecting consumers and producers. The new website allows producers including farmers and fishermen to connect with a variety of consumers -chefs, retailers and the general public-by registering their business and product offerings on SC MarketMaker.

Since we launched the Certified SC Grown program in May 2007, we've worked to encourage people to eat local and get our products into new markets, and this web site will help make that job just a little bit easier by offering a resource such as this one for anyone to use. It's easy to use and free for anyone and is all due to a collective effort between numerous agencies to make it work here for our state.

This has the potential for national reach. A fisherman in Georgetown will be able to use MarketMaker to market his shrimp not only to consumers, but also to restaurants and retail grocers who are looking for locally grown products. Or mom can find that perfect basket of peaches for that cobbler this summer all by using this free service.

Dr. Lamie says, "Our goal is to make the site a resource for all farmers and businesses in the food supply chain, and we are as interested in helping a grocery store find farm-fresh eggs and seafood as we are in helping the farmer and fisherman find a place to sell them, so it's important to include as many producers in our databases as possible."

MarketMaker is a national partnership of land grant institutions and State Departments of Agriculture dedicated to the development of a comprehensive interactive data base of food industry marketing and business data. It is currently one of the most extensive collections of searchable food industry related data in the country. All the information can be mapped and queried by the user.

One of the original developers of the program, Richard Knipe with the University of Illinois Extension, said "It's come together a whole lot faster than they ever dreamed of and there is incredible cooperation between the states to help MarketMaker."

South Carolina is just one of 11 states to launch this program. It offers all kinds of opportunities to market commodities. Only Georgia and Mississippi in the Southeast have signed on as we have. This gives our growers a competitive edge to market their produce and products into areas they may not have had access to before.

So far, Dr. Lamie said he is receiving positive feedback regarding the new program. I encourage you to utilize this new tool, www.scmarketmaker.com starting next month.

Equine Management Workshop to be offered in Lexington

A six-week equine management workshop will begin March 10 and run through April 14. The program will meet on Tuesday nights beginning at 6:30 p.m. and finish up by 9 p.m. at the old Kroger building at 605 Main Street in Lexington.

"This workshop is a great opportunity for anyone who is a new horse owner and even for those who have owned horses for many years," said Mary Ellen Tobias, an equine specialist for the SC Department of Agriculture.

The workshop will cover a wide array of topics important to horse owners. Some the topics to be discussed includes pasture and nutrition, horse trailer issues, pasture management and barn safety, bio-security, and micro-chipping.

Registration is $60 for the entire workshop or $15 for individual or walk-in sessions.

For more information, or to register, contact Bill Melven at 803-359-3165 ext. 3 or bill.melven@sc.nacdnet.net. Anyone interested in attending this workshop is asked to register no later than March 3.

National FFA Week to be celebrated in South Carolina

South Carolina FFA members from secondary schools, community colleges and Clemson University will celebrate National FFA Week, February 21-28.

"FFA members set a positive example through their supervised agricultural training experiences, leadership skills, work ethic, academic achievement and community service," said John W. Parris, state director of public affairs with the SC FFA organization.

The primary focus of National FFA Week is to provide members an opportunity to share with the general public and policy makers that agriculture is the number one industry in economic importance to our state and nation with one of every five employed in either the production, processing and marketing of food and fiber or the management of natural resources.

FFA members may choose one of the more than 300 career opportunities in the science, businesses or technology of agriculture for their life's work. More than 500,000 FFA members, located in every state, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands, are success oriented and driven by their desire to make a positive difference in the future of agriculture and the quality of life for all.

A highlight of the observance of National FFA Week in South Carolina is the FFA-sponsored State Legislators Appreciation Day Ceremony on the north steps of the State House followed by a Celebration Luncheon at the State Fair in Columbia.

Lamb Promotion, Research and Information Order Referendum

USDA - Farm Service Agency announces that until February 27, a referendum will be conducted on whether to continue or terminate the Lamb Promotion, Research and Information Order. Elementary school student from Cassatt grows award winning cabbage

Midway Elementary School student Courtney Thompson has always enjoyed growing flowers in her home garden. Now her green thumb has earned her a little green for college.

Courtney grew her award winning cabbage over the summer as part of the Bonnie Plants Third Grade Cabbage Program. Each year Bonnie Plants distributes O. S. Cross (oversized) cabbage plants - one per student - to participating third-grade classes across the nation at no charge in the spring. According to Ellis Ingram, the Cabbage Program Director for Bonnie Plants, in 2008 their 400 person sales staff gave out cabbages to 20 churches and 20 schools in their sales area.

Courtney was given her cabbage in Heather Walters' class at Midway Elementary School along with at least 30 students in her school. Courtney said she grew her cabbage in her backyard making sure it was watered every day.

"It was hard to get it out of the ground," Courtney said of her cabbage. She said her grandmother helped her get the cabbage out of the ground and was surprised it got as big as it did.

This budding horticulturist said she's excited about growing stuff and wants a career in agriculture. She said her favorite part was seeing the cabbage grow every day. As the winner of 65 applicants from South Carolina this year, Courtney won a $1000 savings bond from Bonnie Plants. The savings bond is for her to use for college.

South Carolina's Commissioner of Agriculture, Hugh Weathers, said he is pleased with the hands-on program that helps pique a child's interest in agriculture.

"I commend Bonnie Plants for what they are doing to help the students understand the origin of their food," Commissioner Weathers said.

Courtney was recognized at her school on Friday, January 23, and word of her winning has inspired other students to grow cabbages, said Lisa Stockdale, a teacher at Midway Elementary School.

"They are looking forward to next year and already asking when the cabbages are coming again," Stockdale said.

Bonnie Plants is based in Union Springs, Ala., and is a division of Alabama Farmers Co-Op in Decatur. Seven years ago Bonnie Plants began offering a free cabbage plant to third graders to promote gardening with children in schools. Today, the program has expanded and in 2007 Bonnie Plants gave out $43,000 in Savings Bonds. In 2007, Bonnie Plants delivered more than one million plants to third graders.

Third-grade teachers and local FFA sponsors can participate in Bonnie Plant Farm's Third Grade Cabbage Program by registering on line at www.bonnieplants.com.

Stir-Fry Pork and Vegetables

2 tbsp. soybean oil	1/2 c. sliced mushrooms
1/2 c. vertically sliced onions	2 tbsp. soy sauce
2 c. Chinese pea pods	1 tsp. minced fresh ginger root
1 c. sweet red bell pepper, cubed	1/2 tsp. sugar, pepper to taste
6 oz. cooked pork cut in 2-inch strips

Heat oil in large non-stick skillet or wok over medium high heat about 1 minute or until hot. Add onions and stir-fry about 5 minutes or until vegetables are crisp-tender and pork is thoroughly heated. Makes 4 servings.
